

Spoonliquor, The Band, was born in 2001, Rotterdam, and raised by a selection of individuals who share and combine musical interest. Over the years they shaped and defined their musical identity as a band and evolved into a multi-layered musical experience. Since music is emotion they've made an effort to cover the whole spectrum. Their music is therefore characterized by dynamic differences in sound and content.

Not until 2005 the band felt ready to share it's views with others. Since their first live performance in front of an audience, they passed the point of no return.

It wasn't head over heels, though. They carefully chose their opportunities and slowly but surely they began to expand their territory.

With hundreds of hours of jamming and recording in their own rehearsalstudio they carefully built a repertoire, but it wasn't until November 2006 when they decided to step into a professional recordingstudio to preserve some of their finest from oblivion. They felt it was time for the next chapter and what was supposed to be the closing of an era turned out to be the start of a journey which they now refer to as:

The band's sole purpose on this journey is, amongst a lot of other irrelevant things, to share its 'refined' views with others. Through recording and performing on- and off stage and the use of all kinds of other media known to Mankind they try to contribute to a collective consciousness of Peace & Understanding.

Spoonliquor members share a full artistic background in a wide variety of disciplines such as audio/visual entertainment, performing arts containing painting, photography, interior- and exterior design, as well as graphic- and web design.

Reading this means you either just have been a witness or you are strongly considering becoming one... Invite them guys over, or try and go see 'em somewhere. If there are no options nearby, tell your local band/clubpromotor to go earn himself a living and make sure Spoonliquor can be a matter of choice in the near future.
